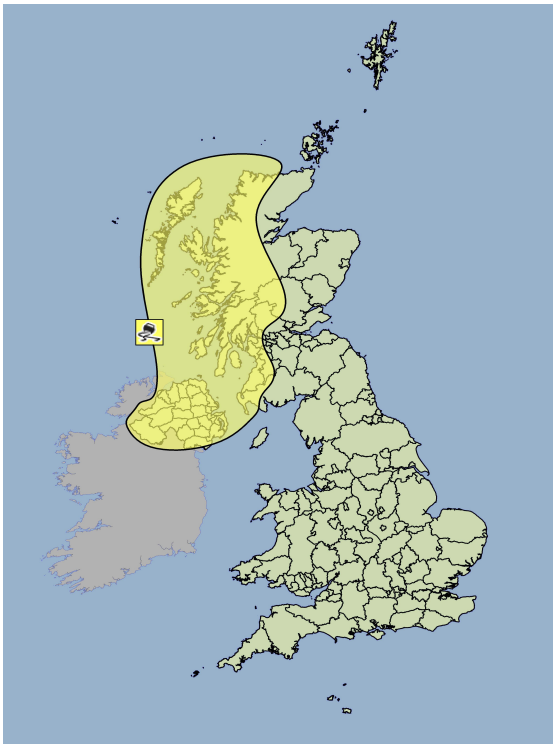
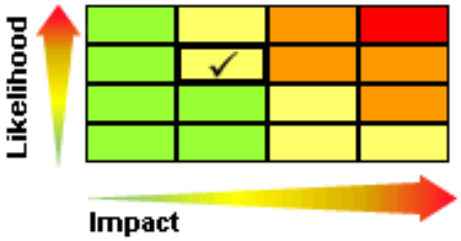
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Clear spells are likely at times during Wednesday evening and overnight into Thursday, with temperatures falling below freezing in most places. A wintry mix of showers is also likely, such that ice is expected to be a hazard on untreated surfaces.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 18:00 on Wed, 17th Feb 2016 until 10:00 on Thu, 18th Feb 2016

Clear spells and occasional showers are expected to affect Northern Ireland and western parts of Scotland during Wednesday evening and overnight into Thursday. The showers will fall as a mixture of rain, sleet and snow, giving a covering of snow in places, chiefly on ground above 200 metres. Temperatures will fall to below freezing in most places, so that there is a risk of ice forming on untreated surfaces.

Please be aware of the potential for difficult travelling conditions and minor disruption.
